

Please do something about AT&T's skyrocketing prices for high-speed cable Internet access in my area (West Los Angeles).

I ordered the service in March of 2002 for a monthly price of $35.95. In January 2003 my rates were raised to $42.95. Just 3 months later they are raising my monthly rates to $56.95. This constitutes over a 58% price increase over a one year period. Will it keep going up?

There are some companies that offer lower rates such as SBC/Yahoo's DSL for I believe $39.95, but of course it is not allowed in my area.

Why are we allowing these companies to have monopolies in the areas they service? I thought the Telecommunication Act of 1996 was suppose to increase competition not give them complete control.

Please allow more competition into the market.
